

In 1894 a few small greenhouses were built to grow flowers for Eden Park in Cincinnati. In 1933 the Eden Park Greenhouse was created to consolidate the growing process. Four years later it was renamed in honor of Irwin M. Krohn. Today the Conservatory houses more than 3,500 plants in 6 different sections. Ranging from desert to rainforest, each section houses a different environment. Highlights include a tropical area with banana, vanilla, and cacao trees, a floral room with a variety of shows each year, and a palm house with 45 ft. tall palms and a 20 ft. waterfall leading to a koi pond.
